

Stefano Caggiano

role

Programme Leader Industrial Design
Istituto Marangoni School of Design Milano

Stefano Caggiano is a design critic with an emphasis on design languages. Graduated in Product Design and in Philosophy, Stefano has a long-standing experience as a design lecturer in universities both in Italy and internationally, and currently holds the post of Program Leader for the Industrial Design Department at Istituto Marangoni School of Design, Milan, Italy.

Concurrently he works as a senior researcher for the Big Data-Driven consulting society NextAtlas, studying and forecasting new emerging trends in the contemporary visual scene comprising design, fashion, and art. Author of several books and numerous articles on design languages, he also works as design critic and columnist with the leading Italian and international design magazine “Interni,” focusing on new aesthetic trends developing in product and furniture design, with reference to the evolution of cultural, social, and technological contexts.